April 12 is Civil War Day

April 12, 1861: Southern forces fire upon Ft. Sumter, South Carolina. The Civil War formally begins.

Col. Hiram Strong and Congressman Lewis B. Gunckel

Lawyers, Civil War Patriots, founders of Coolidge Wall

Col. Hiram Strong

Hiram Strong was a Colonel in the Ninety-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War. He died of wounds received on September 19 during the battle of Chickamauga in 1863. He was an unlikely soldier but a good one, a natural leader without a natural inclination to earn fame or solve problems through killing and maiming his fellow man.

He was born in Centerville, Ohio in 1825. He graduated from Miami University in 1846, and was admitted to the bar in 1849. He was as unlikely a lawyer as he had been a soldier; he was bashful, slow and hesitating in speech, quiet and retiring.

He overcame his disabilities to develop a large and lucrative law practice. There was a generous aspect to his personality that gave him empathy for his clients, and he soon developed a reputation as a peacemaker and problem solver. He practiced for four years with William C. Bartlett, and then formed a nine-year association with Lewis B. Gunckel in 1853.

Lewis B. Gunckel

Lewis B. Gunckel was born in 1826 in Germantown, Ohio. He read law with Moses B. Walker and Walker's partner H. V. R. Lord. He graduated from Cincinnati Law School in 1851 and won the first case he tried, his adversaries being his old mentors Walker and Lord.

Gunckel was Hiram Strong's senior partner in the law firm of Gunckel & Strong. He developed a reputation as one of the most successful jury lawyers in southern Ohio and as a peacemaker who used his influence to settle controversies.

He was elected to the Ohio Senate, was a delegate to the Republican National Convention and a supporter of John Fremont in 1856. He was a member of the reception committee when Lincoln came to Dayton in September 1859. He recalled being welcomed into the future president's room at the Phillips House only to find Lincoln sitting in a chair in his shirt sleeves while his wife brushed his hair.

In the Ohio Senate, Gunckel was the author of

On August 5, 1862, Hiram volunteered in the Union Army for three years of service with the Ninety-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He did this not out of a desire for military life or ambition, but out of a sense of duty to his community and for the common good, giving up his home family and a successful law practice.

Hiram had no military knowledge when he entered the army and had to learn "on the job." He adapted well and rose through the ranks. In July 1863, he asked for and was granted a twenty-day period of sick leave and returned home until August 14. He had considered resigning his commission citing disappointment with the lack of progress in the War and his own health problems. But each time his sense of duty strengthened his resolve to remain true to the course of his three-year service commitment.

Col. Strong returned to the War and on August 17, led the 93rd OVI on a march to Alabama and established camp in Lookout Valley and awaited further orders. By September 18th, the Ninety-third Ohio had joined with other forces of the Army of the Cumberland, under Gen. William Rosecrans, at Chickamauga Creek in northern Georgia, and engaged in heavy combat. The next day, in battle with Gen. Braxton Bragg's Confederate forces Col. Hiram Strong was mortally wounded by an enemy bullet.

Hiram died on October 7 and his body was returned to Dayton. A funeral service and burial took place on October 12, 1863.

the soldiers' voting law, of measures to send medical aid and supplies to the battlefields, and of bills to provide care for the widows and children of those killed in service of the Union.

In the middle of the Civil War, he introduced a bill for the establishment of a state soldiers' home and this became his pet project. He canvassed the state as a presidential elector for Lincoln in 1864, and in that same year Governor Brough established a state soldiers' home near Columbus with Gunckel as one of its trustees.

In 1865 Congress established the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton and Gunckel was its first resident manager. It still exists today as the Veterans Administration Center.

After the war, Gunckel served for many years as manager and secretary of the board of the Soldiers' Home without compensation. In 1871, he was appointed by President Grant as special commissioner to investigate frauds practiced upon the Cherokee, Creek and Chickasaw Indian tribes. His report was a milestone in the history of reforms in the Indian service.

He served in Congress from 1872 to 1875. He lost his bid for reelection and spent the rest of his life in the practice of law in Dayton.

In 1860, Gunckel married the daughter of Valentine Winters. When Winters and his son Jonathan founded Winters National Bank in 1882, Gunckel became a member of the bank's first board of directors.

Hiram Strong was born on October 28, 1825 and died on October 7, 1863 at the age of 37. He is located in Section 87 Lot 272.

Lewis B. Gunckel was born October 15, 1826 died on October 3, 1903 at the age of 76. He is located in Section 44 Lot 1008.
