HISTORIC CEMETERY & ARBORETUM

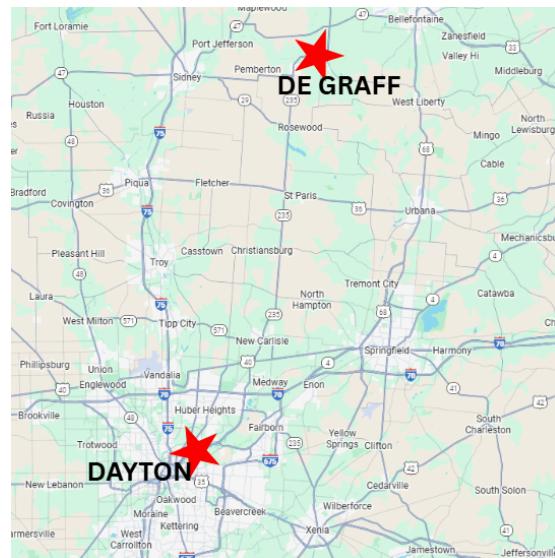

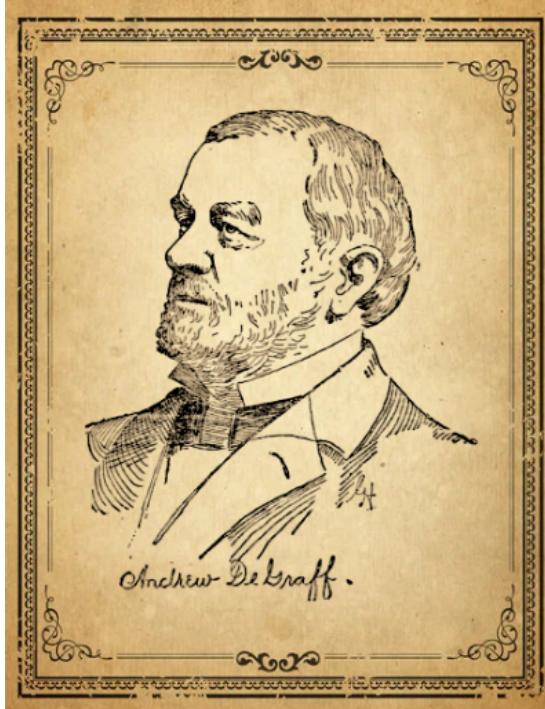

Col. Andrew De Graff

About an hour north of Dayton is the town of DeGraff, Ohio, named for “The Railway King” himself: Col. Andrew De Graff; remembered as a “marked man of the nation,” “builder of railroads, elevators and projector of great schemes,” and “one of the most notable characters in the growth of the northwest.”

So, who was Col. De Graff?

To learn more, we turn to The Saint Paul Globe’s obituary of the man, published November 8th, 1894*:

"Andrew De Graff, or Col. De Graff, as he has always familiarly been called, has long been an important figure in the Northwest. All that region tributary to the Mississippi owes much of its present prosperity to the shrewd foresight of Col. De Graff, who was quick to perceive the necessity of railroads for the rapid transportation of the rich products of this fertile region. Under his able generalship lines of rail were constructed all over this entire district, and over thirty years ago Col. De Graff received the well-earned title of "Railroad King of Ohio.""

"Within a half century this notable man has seen little villages expand and grow into large and important cities. Under his watchful eye thinly settled territories have grown into great and populous commonwealths. His field of operation in the way of railroad construction has extended over no less than a dozen states. With the iron arteries of commerce he united these states. His foresight told him that this vast and fertile region would someday become the seat of a new empire, where millions would find prosperous and happy homes."

Our visitors may be asking; "What De Graff mausoleum?"

The one that used to be there. This short article published by the Dayton Herald in 1899 reveals the key piece of information:

"No one could see Col. De Graff, even in his broken condition, and not realize that he was one among many thousands – a man marked by nature with force and keen and broad insight. He was a man of affairs. No one could see him and not realize that he was, or had been.

Standing considerably over six feet tall, with square, broad shoulders, possessing a handsome, strong, magnetic countenance, clear keen eyes, rather heavy eyebrows, hair black and only tinged with gray even to his dying day, he was a most commanding figure wherever seen. Up to his last appearance walking about, even in his declined condition of mind, he stood as straight as an arrow, and seemed to thrill with the inspiration of youth.

For more than fifty years he was a great organizer of great schemes, such as railroads, elevator projects, etc. He began in Ohio, and came eventually to Minnesota, not giving up his prodigious schemes in the former state. At the time of his death he was a heavy stockholder in great projects in both Ohio and Minnesota and in several other states.

The funeral arrangements are not yet made."

The DeGraff Mausoleum.

The beautiful De Graff chapel erected in Woodland cemetery by the late Mr. Charles De Graff, about 25 years ago, at an expense of $10,500, is by direction of Mrs. Minnie De Graff Berkley, to be torn down. The remains of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew De Graff and of her brother Frank, are to be buried in the ground by side of those of her brother Charles, the lot leveled, sodded, and otherwise beautified, and a suitable monument erected. The chapel was erected on new made ground, which settled and cracked the marble walls. About three years ago Mrs. Berkley had the chapel repaired at an expense of $2,000. She now deems it best to remove the chapel and inter the remains of her parents and brothers in graves that will never again be disturbed. Mrs. Berkley and husband, Mr. John A. Berkley are now at Hot Springs, Ark.

In 1873, Col. De Graff's son Charles purchased the family lot for $2,688.60, including perpetual care from the cemetery.

About 10 years after Charles died, the shifting & settling of the soil caused the mausoleum walls to crack, which is why his younger sister, Minnesota De Graff (called 'Minnie' for short) chose to have it torn down and the family reinterred on the lot. For whatever reason, after the demolition of the family mausoleum, no headstones or markers were ever put in place.

Today, the De Graff family lot is a peaceful grassy space overlooking the eastern edge of the cemetery, with a great view of the pond. Visitors can find this lot in section 106, lot 1798 by clicking HERE.
